

Sunday

8:00 After sleeping in a bit, the day starts with reading a few chapters. Usually on Sunday morning I am starting a new book because I stayed up way too late finishing whatever I was reading previously. (I do always read a chapter of the new book before going to sleep, because I'm OCD and can't not be in the middle of reading something at all moments.

9:00 Breakfast while watching CBS Sunday Morning with Michael. That show always has touching stories, some coverage of the Arts, and the wonderful "moment of nature."

— Louise Penny and Linda Fairstein were featured recently

11:00 Time to settle in for some more reading.

1:00 Take a reading break to finalize the choices for tomorrow's Monday BOLO post. This requires looking at the options, choosing those I truly think will be the most interesting for my blog followers. Since I really try to limit it to 4-5 choices, it sometimes means some difficult cuts.

2:00 Lunchtime. It's likely that I will heat up some leftover pizza for Michael and I. We will then spend sometime catching up on whatever TV show we are behind on at the moment (trust me, there are so many options).

Face off
Nashville
The Handmaid's Tale

4:00 Back to the reading.

6:30 Dinner. No doubt Michael will make some delicious meal— yes, I know how lucky I am to have a husband who loves to cook.

Yay!

Blame - J. Abbott
The Late Show - Connelly
Afterlife - M. Sakay
Noir@the Bar
~~The Book of David B.A. Paris~~

!!!

Hollywood Homicide
Review - finally
Afterlife review

7:30 Depending on how long dinner lasts, I will use whatever time remains to look over the reviews for the next week. I write my reviews 4-5 days after I finish the book, but then I set it aside for a week or longer. Since I am reading well in advance of release date, this is rarely a problem. So this is my chance to edit or rewrite what is already written, think about what really resonated with me from the book (those topics and feelings that linger after the passage of time are so important) to make sure my review makes those things clear, and lastly re-examine (again) the opening and closing of the review. If I haven't already gotten the information on author's website URL and "Purchase Link" information, I will do that as well.

— try not to fall into an Internet hole.

9:00 Time for more TV. At the moment, that means Game of Thrones, but Sunday never has a shortage of shows to watch.

10:00 This is a moment of spontaneity. Depending on my mood and schedule, I'll probably watch another show with Michael. If I need to – or if a book is calling to me – I might decide to go back to reading.

— Books are always a draw, right?

11:00 If I wasn't already reading, I will settle in for a half-hour of reading or so before getting myself ready for bed. It is impossible for me to sleep without reading first.

"Just one more chapter"

12:00 Hopefully my head hits the pillow by this time – if not a bit earlier. The workweek ahead arrives quicker than any of us would like.

Monday - Bleh!